After spending several hours each day putting together newsletters themselves, library staff at Dickstein Shapiro LLP realized the firm needed a more efficient way to clip and disperse high-value news throughout the firm. Dickstein Shapiro selected LexisNexis® Clipper powered by Ozmosys® and now can edit internal newsletters and target must-read industry trends and news much more quickly and easily.

LexisNexis Clipper provides you with the ability to produce electronic newsletters and briefings in a fraction of the time. You can include internal content along with subscription content from the LexisNexis services and other premium content providers and aggregators. In addition, you can pull in updates from the Web at large, including government agency sites, the Federal Register, RSS feeds, and more than 2,000 targeted, quality Web sites and blogs.

You also get the ability to:

- customize newsletters by reviewing, selecting, and prioritizing articles from disparate content sources
- add interpretation and analysis to articles
- insert logos, titles, and banners
- utilize a variety of delivery options, such as e-mail (including mobile versions), html/xml, and RSS
- save busy readers’ precious time—they can browse an efficient at-a-glance format, click on items of interest, and move directly to content without stopping for ID and password authentication

It’s the ideal current awareness solution that fits any organization’s needs to share timely, stylized newsletters with the enterprise.

LexisNexis Clipper is the first product released by Ozmosys in alliance with LexisNexis since the debut of Total Alerts—an enterprise delivery and distribution list platform—in 2006. Both tools help organizations manage effectively the vast amounts of electronic and Web content floating through their organizations.

“LexisNexis Clipper appeals to all corporations and firms because it provides information executives with an interface that is easy to use, delivers to portals and intranets seamlessly, and requires very little maintenance.” says Eric Gross, CEO of Ozmosys. “Our clients were looking for something that would give them the control and allow them to seamlessly incorporate their high-value content subscriptions into a newsletter that reflected their look and feel.”
